

417-419 MAIN STREET. GOING OUT OF BUSINESS

Our great Going Out of Business Sale has stirred the town from one end to the other. No wonder, though; goods have never before been slaughtered as they are at our store. Ours is not a fake sale—a sale gotten up for mere effect—but an actual going out of business sale in which everything is slaughtered without mercy. Old goods, new goods, good or bad, everything must go, and within a short time, too, as we intend to vacate our premises in about another week or so. In order to accomplish this bigger reductions have been made, as the sooner we are able to wind up the less is our expense and the cheaper we can sell the goods. Now please bear in mind that this sale, at the rate the goods have been moving, will positively not last more than about a week, and our stock still affords a fair selection. * * No mail orders filled. We thank our many mail order friends for their kind and liberal patronage, but owing to the immense rush we are unable to fill orders.

THREATENED BY NEGLECT

The Trees in Boston's Famous Common in Danger of Destruction

ON ACCOUNT OF IMPROPER CARE

A Controversy That Shakes the City to Its Depths—Report of a New York Expert on Trees.

Boston, January 11.—Boston is in the throes of one of its periodical struggles to save the Common. Apparently these struggles have been going on for the last two centuries and a half, and without them it is only fair to add, in all probability there would now be no Common to save. The reason of the present agitation is the recently published report of the superintendent of parks of New York City, Mr. Samuel Parsons, who, in a long and elaborate report, has pointed out the various ways in which the Common is being ruined, and has urged the most effective means of saving it. The report is a masterpiece of logic and fact, and has already done much to arouse the public mind to the danger of the Common. The report is a masterpiece of logic and fact, and has already done much to arouse the public mind to the danger of the Common.

various levels and contours, even, are still practically the same as when the Indians were there. The Common is a beautiful place, and it is a pity that it is being ruined. The report is a masterpiece of logic and fact, and has already done much to arouse the public mind to the danger of the Common.

maintain trees in their full vigor in the heart of a large city. Mr. Parsons states that even in these circumstances not nearly so much has been done as should have been done. He says that the trees are being ruined by neglect, and that the Common is being ruined by neglect. The report is a masterpiece of logic and fact, and has already done much to arouse the public mind to the danger of the Common.

increasing the fastenings, for in several cases they are being forced by the growth of the tree right into the heart of the trunk. In one noteworthy case the iron bands, having been left on too long, have been removed and allowed to show the great scars that have eaten deep into the wood of the tree. In other cases the iron bands have been removed all along the trunk, leaving a bare, bare, pole, void of all symmetry and comeliness.

Mr. Parsons' conclusion, however, is more hopeful. "Well cared for," he says, "an old tree will generally display astonishing vitality and vigor of foliage to the latest days of its life, and it is sometimes really astonishing to see how an old tree may be revived by the application of rich soil to its roots, and care of its branches and limbs. There will be no doubt, in the mind of any one who knows his Boston, that Mr. Parsons' remarks will 'make a row' there is no less doubt, in the mind of any true Bostonian that all North America will sympathize with any action touching the welfare of the Common.
